

Assignments – CC101 Intro to the Catholic Faith

Fall 2011 – DISTANCE LEARNING

Instructor: Eric J. Westby

How to Read/Study

The following excerpt is from Dcn James Keating's "A Seminarian's Lection: Reading to Know and to Receive Divine Love" in the Institute for Priestly Formation Spiritual Directors Manual.

1. Approach the text that is assigned or the classroom notes to be reviewed in prayer. Ask the Spirit to guide you through your study and enlighten you as to concepts that quicken your affection for communion with God. No study will be completely irrelevant to you; it will serve the truth, serve the needs of your people, or deep your own intimacy with Christ.
2. What does this text say? What does this text say to me? What does this text lead me to say to God? What do I detect God is saying to me through this text?
3. Remember you are receiving the text on two levels, discursive and contemplative. The first level is what the text says in itself ("Will this be on the test?"). The second level is what God is saying to you about your conversion journey. They have an interpenetrating, symbiotic relationship, not oppositional. Record both levels in your notebook. To keep academic notes distinct from personal insights it can be helpful to divide your notebook. Use one side of the book as a spiritual journal and the other side to record discursive notes for academic study. The "journal" side of your notebook does not have to be elaborate but simply provides a place for you to briefly record what is personally relevant to your spiritual life. After class or study, these records can then be prayed over and shared with your spiritual director.
